1-Joseph Fox died in 1792.

Noted events in his life were:

- He had a residence in Hanging Heaton, Dewsbury.
- He was Wesleyan Methodist.

Joseph married someone. He had one son: David.

2-David Fox^{1,2,3,4,5,6,7} was born on 6 Oct 1790 in Dewsbury, Yorkshire, died on 21 May 1871 in Great Ayton, Yorkshire at age 80, and was buried on 26 May 1871 in FBG Ayton.

General Notes: David Fox had been raised a Methodist, but was a convinced Friend. He loved nuslc and he played the cello, but knowing Friends disapproved of music he felt he should give up the cello. Feeling it would be wrong to sell it or give it to another person, he buried it. A play based on this incident and called "The Quaker's Cello", was written in 1933 by Clifford Bax. David Fox had fifteen children, Deborah being a child of his second wife.

David Fox, 81. 21 5 mo. 1871

Ayton, late of Dewsbury. An Elder.

In preparing a few reminiscences of one who joined our Society by convincement, we wish to confine ourselves to such circumstances as will show forth the loving kindness of our heavenly Father; as an encouragement to others, to trust in the Lord with all their heart and lean not to their own understanding; in all their ways to acknowledge Him, and He will direct their paths.

The subject of this memoir was born Tenth month 6th, 1790. He lost his father in early childhood, and his widowed mother was left with two small children. He often spoke of her solicitude to imbue their tender minds with the love of their heavenly Father; and her consistent walk under many trials and privations was evidently blessed to him. She was assisted in bringing up her children by their grandfather and uncle, who with herself were members of the Wesleyan body, and who were also seriously inclined.

From youth to manhood he worked under his uncle, who was a clothier, and had married early in life with nothing to depend on but his own honest endeavours. David Fox had a great love for music, and was much sought after on this account; being frequently engaged in playing on instruments in different places of worship. So great was his proficiency that he composed tunes himself; but he has often been heard to say, that he believed the system of congregational music was more calculated to gratify the senses than to elevate the soul to God: and that from experience he could say, his mind was more engaged in performing his part to the satisfaction of himself and others, than in solemn devotion.

Some few years after his marriage he was afflicted with a very severe illness, which kept him from work more than six months: and had it not been for the endeavours of his wife who was a dressmaker, they would have been plunged into distress and poverty. In this exigency his mind was brought into close conflict as to a future state; and earnest were his desires to enter on a course of life acceptable to God. A short time prior to this, a Friend named Thomas Colley had visited Dewsbury, and held a public meeting, at which several were convinced; among whom was a preacher amongst the Wesleyans. These persons united themselves to Friends, and held their little meetings in a room engage 1 for the purpose; there being no meeting-house in Dewsbury at that time. David Fox went one First day morning to the room where Friends met; but seeing no one enter, he shrunk from going in, and left without doing so. The next week however found him there again, when a Friend at the door invited him in. During the time of silence his mind was deeply aflfected, and a Friend rose, saying that he believed all who had come to years of maturity, were at times led to desire " that they might die the death of the righteous, and that their latter end might be like His." This and the words which followed so reached his state, that he was much broken in spirit; and at the close of the meeting was glad to escape observation, and retire to pour out his soul before God, who in mercy had thus met with him. From, this time forward he attended the same little company; and going on from strength to strength, was encouraged to hold on his way rejoicing.

Being still in very delicate health, he went to Harrogate for change of air. He there met with Jonathan and Hannah Chapman Backhouse, who were then holding public meetings. They accosted him as they were walking out, and invited him to attend the meeting they were about to hold, which was at some little distance. He said he did not feel able to walk, upon which they proffered him the use of a pony: but being unaccustomed to riding, he was afraid to venture in his weak state. Not discouraged, they took him in their own carriage: and from tliis time felt so much interest in him, that they kept up an occasional correspondence, and many years afterwards saw him restored to health, and in a prosperous condition. When on a religious visit at Dewsbury, they called to take tea in his humble dwelling: and on his recounting the goodness and mercy which had followed him since they last met, Jonathan Backhouse exclaimed, "Wonderful! wonderful! it is indeed the Lord's doing, and is marvellous in our eyes." The following letter was found among his papers, and was evidently written to Jonathan Backhouse and wife soon after they first met at Harrogate. "Dewsbury, 11 mo. 17th, 1822.

" Dear Friends,

"These few lines are to inform you, that since my return from Harrogate I have been variously tossed with my complaint, but I am now so far recovered as to begin my work. But yet I am very weak and not able to do much, and my wife has also been very poorly; but she is now better, for which I am thankful, for truly it was a trying prospect to me when she was taken poorly in our low state. Oh, that we might be sufficiently thankful for such mercies! and friends, I believe it was nothing short of the love of God, which tendered our souls together. May we individually live so near it in ourselves, that we may tread upon every evil disposition; so that if we never see each other's faces again, we may be prepared to meet above, out of the reach of all temptation. For, dear friends, you know there are many things that would draw our minds away from the truth. the weakness of man! truly, I never saw myself weaker. My desire is at this time, that I may become so blind spiritually as not to move in any thing, but as the Lord moves me: for truly I see a danger in making idols and falling down to them, instead of waiting for the truth. Oh! that I might abide in patience through every trying dispensation. So no more at present, but my love to you, with desires that you may reign above the glories of this fading world. David Fox."

The following reply from Jonathan Backhouse was dated, Darlington, 11 mo. 27th, 1822.

" Esteemed friend,

"I received thy kind note, and was pleased to hear of the improvement in thy health, which I hope may continue to be the case; though I felt for thee in the renewal of affliction from thy wife's serious illness, and shall be glad to hear that this cloud hat also passed away. Many indeed are the trials and afSictions that attend us in this life; but it is no doubt wisely ordered, that our affections may not be too much placed on any thing here; but that we may be more and more incited to seek Him, who in all ages, and to all states and conditions, has ever been found to be the only true refuge in times of trouble: and who does indeed often mercifully, very mercifully, sweeten the otherwise bitter cup, and enable us to go on our way rejoicing. Well, my dear friend, may neither heights nor depths, things present nor yet to come, ever be able to separate us from that love, which under all trials we have at times been led to acknowledge has indeed been our stay."

David Fox was received into membership in the year 1823. A few year after this, he was called to pass through close trial in the death of his wife; who left him with six children, the youngest of whom soon followed its mother to the grave. His own health being far from strong, some of his friends advised him to give up his former occupation, that of weaving, as unsuitable for his constitution; and offered to assist him in a small way of business. One of them, a doctor, wished him to draw upon him to the amount of &30, and gave him vahiable assistance in selecting a few drugs, &c. So anxious was he not to trespass on the liberality of others, that he only availed himself of the loan of 30/s., which he was soon able to repay. Content with little things, and blessed by Him who knew the integrity of his heart, he succeeded to the astonishment of all around him, and experienced the fulfilment of the Saviour's ?promise, " seek Jirst the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." In 1829 he was united in marriage to Rebecca Payne; and a short extract frome one of his letters will best show his feelings at this time. "Oh my dear friend, I often feel tenderly for thee, for I believe there is a good work begun in thee. Oh that nothing may rob thee of it, but that we may both mind this before earthly treasure; for what are earthly things compared to that life which will never end? Bear with me; for I am a slow traveller in this most necessary road. Oh for a deeper dwelling, - for more obedience to knowledge received!" He was a diligent attender of meetings, and as an elder, was faithful in handing the word of encouragement and counsel. Many a word did he let fall to those who were needing it, and not long before his death he was heard to say, that he believed "his work had been to scatter seed by the way-side, and to speak the word of encouragement in private, rather than to fill a more conspicuous place." His cautiousness, and strict watchfulness not to exceed the measure of his gift, might occasionally lead him into the other extreme, of keeping back more than was meet; and he often acknowledged himself to be an unprofitable servant. He had not the advantages of early education; but being naturally possessed of a superior mind, and having a retentive memory, he was an exceedingly interesting companion: and the originality of his remarks were often of a lively and instructive character. He was well read in the early history of the Christian church, and the works of the ancient Friends; and his high appreciation of their self-denying efforts to counteract the evils then existing, led him to investigate those of the present day. This brought his own feet into a strait path, and made him willing to suffer for his conscientious adherence to what he believed was the path of duty. He would often in familiar conversation speak of his experience, and recount many of the afflictions dispensed to him by Divine Providence as blessings, which had preserved him from speculation, that might have had a tendency to draw his mind to the love of outward gain. His desires were moderate, and cheerful contentment was the covering of his spirit.

He left Dewsbury in the spring of 1871, and removed to Ayton, for the purpose of settling near to some of his married children, and of being near meeting, which he had been unable to attend regularly, owing to bodily infirmity. Many were surprised at his leaving his native place at so advanced an age; but he several times expressed the satisfaction he felt in taking this step, saying that "his work was done and his wish accomplished, and that it mattered little where the poor body was laid." His last days were often employed in reading the Scriptures of truth, and looking forward to the end of his pilgrimage. He would say, "if I am only permitted to have a place among the redeemed who have gone before me, all will be well, whether sooner or later. I have nothing of my own; it will be all of unmerited mercy in Christ Jesus." He attended meeting twice on the first day preceding his illness, and came down-stairs as usual next morning; but was suddenly seized with a fit of trembling, succeeded by great prostration of strength. He was sensible of his weakness, saying "it will be a great mercy if I am safely landed in a few days." One of his children going in, he attempted to repeat his favourite hymn,

"Jesus, refuge of my soul, Let me to Thy bosom fly: " and frequently exclaimed, " I have every thing to be thankful for; every burden seems to be removed."

He sent messages of love to his absent children, several of whom arrived in time to see him: and to one who asked him if he had any thing particular to say, he replied ^'practice is the main thing." He was very patient, and thoughtful for those around him; but his weakness, and intervals of unconsciousness, prevented him from saying much. Sweet peace and unbroken confidence were his portion, no doubts being permitted to assail.

On the 103rd Psalm being repeated to him, he expressed his sense of the rich promises of Scripture, adding "we have had a precious time together." To one of his daughters he said, "thou wilt lose a good friend when thou losest me, but the Lord will be better to thee than a father. He is so to all those who are rightly exercised towards Him." He took an affecting leave of his dear wife, who was enabled to thank God, who liad thus given him the victory. One of his children remarking, "it is nearly over, thou wilt soon be with Jesus," he emphatically answered, "I think I shall." These were almost his last words. He gradually sunk into an easy posture, and with a sweet peace resting on his countenance, which seemed a foretaste of the joys of heaven, he gently fell asleep; and to those who were privileged to witness the holy solemnity of that hour, was granted the undoubted assurance that, clothed in the pure white robe of the Saviour's righteousness, he had for ever entered His Eternal Kingdom of joy and love.

Ackworth. Wife of Joseph John Gill.

The oft-quoted words, "In the midst of life we are in death," were sadly exemplified in the sudden removal of Lucy Gill in the prime of a happy and useful life. A severe illness in the early spring, which appeared at one time to bring her very near to the confines of eternity, warned her friends that the thread of her life was but loosely held. Yet she seemed to be making a very satisfactory recovery; and the change from Ack worth, at the school vacation, to the rest and quiet of her old home in Surrey, was apparently bringing complete restoration to health. Her medical advisers had recommended sea air, and a trip to the Channel Islands was contemplated. Before starting, a day was to be spent at Brighton; and those who were with her there noticed how exceptionally bright and active she appeared. The fine sea air always invigorated her, and she enjoyed a walk on the front, and finally went on the West Pier, to accompany to the steamer her brother and some of her children who were going for a short sea trip, intending to return home with her husband. But shortly before the departure of the boat, she was suddenly stricken down by an epileptic seizure, similar to one she had had three months previously; but this time there was to be no recovery. She was carried to the house of some kind friends in the town, who had known her from girlhood, and there she lay in a state of almost entire unconsciousness for nearly three days, till she was released by the hand of death. Pneumonia had set in, and in spite of the best medical advice and the unremitting care of skilled nurses, her breathing rapidly became more and more laboured and her strength ebbed away.

Her remains were laid to rest in the quiet little graveyard adjoining the Ifield Meeting-house, on the borders of Surrey and Sussex, where she reposes amongst her own people, her grave being next to that of her father who died only, two years before her, at the ripe age of 95, nearly double the span of life alloted to his only daughter.

Lucy Gill was born at Crawley, in the autumn of 1846. Her parents were old-fashioned Friends, and she was inclined in her younger days to chafe a little at what she regarded as the unnecessary restrictions imposed upon her; but she was ever ready, in after life, to acknowledge the great debt of gratitude she owed them for the guarded home-training she had received. She was educated at the Friends' School at Croydon, and always retained most pleasant memories of the happy days she spent there.

After spending some years at home, assisting in the ordinary duties of housekeeping, and learning from the efficient teaching of her mother those lessons in thrifty housewifery which were to be so valuable to her in years to come, she was married in 1874 to Joseph J. Gill, who was then establishing a private boarding school at Redhill, near Eeigate, within a few miles of her home.

In this new sphere her talent for household management found ample scope, and she efficiently assisted in the teaching of some of the younger boys. After ten years the school was transferred to other hands; and the handsome present of a service of plate from her old scholars, together with the kindly words which accompanied it, bore testimony to the love and esteem with which she was regarded by those who had been entrusted to her watchful care; and since her decease, one of them, writing from Denver City, says:

"How well I remember her dear, cheerful way of encouraging me; how she used to sit by my bedside, and talk with me, as very few but a mother would have done."

After leaving Redhill, the family removed to Croydon, and here, as her husband was engaged in private teaching, she was free from the cares of school-keeping, and was able to devote herself more fully to the charge of her five children, and found some leisure for other interests, such as temperance and political work. She was, for several years, an active member of the Croydon branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, and she soon became one of the vice-presidents of the Croydon Women's Liberal Association, and president of the Central Ward.

These activities were seriously interrupted by a severe illness, which confined her to her room for about eighteen months; but she continued to take an intelligent interest in the course of events in the outside world, being particularly attracted by social questions; and for some years she was a member of the Fabian Society. On her husband's appointment to a post at Ackworth School, the family removed thither in the summer of 1891. She very much felt the change from the active life of Croydon, with its many and varied interests, to the more restricted sphere at Ackworth; but she always greatly appreciated her connection with the intellectual and social life of the school, and highly valued the friendships that were formed during her seven years' membership in Ackworth Meeting. Though naturally of a serious turn of mind,, and viewing life, perhaps, rather more from the side of its responsibilities than of its pleasures' she readily threw herself into the spirit of innocent recreation, and was always the life and soul of any party of boys or girls which met at her house. She was ever "smart" at games requiring skill, and at one time was very fond of cards, but the knowledge that one of her former pupils had gone astray from a love of gambling,, decided her never again to touch a card, lest by her example she should be falling to u avoid all appearance of evil." Lucy Cheal had never taken any prominent part in religious service, though she did at times confess to a feeling of condemnation for having omitted to say a few words in meetings for worship. But she felt that her chief service lay in the quiet example of a life devoted to her own domestic duties, whilst not neglecting to take advantage of opportunities for privately saying a "word in season." Her great desire for her children, and for all who were dear to her, was that they might know the same assurance of acceptance through the Saviour that she herself experienced, and that their lives might be wholly devoted to His service. For this she often most earn

Great Ayton. An Elder. Widow of David Fox.

"The trying of your faith worketh patience; it let patience have her perfect work, that ye ay be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

The subject of this brief sketch would have been the first to disclaim the assertion that this junction of the Apostle was, even in a small degree, fulfilled in her. Yet those who knew her best through a long life, compassed, as all our lives are, by human frailty, and saw the mellowed openess of her declining years, and the cheerful resignation with which she bore the pain and weariness of a long illness, can testify that, through the help of her Heavenly Father, this was, in a great measure, her happy experience.

Rebecca Payne was the daughter of James and Susanna Payne, of Southwark, and was born the year 1801. With the exception of four years spent at Ackworth School, her early life was passed in London, unmarked by much of incident, until her twenty-fiist year, when she was brought into great sorrow by the sudden death, of her mother, to whom she was tenderly attached. Many had been her little acts of self-denial to add to the comfort of this beloved parent, and she has been heard to say that she never remembered having wilfully grieved her. No wonder then that her removal made a deep impressson on her mind, and led her to enter into renewed covenant with the Lord to serve Him with increased dedication.

Soon after this she removed to Dewsbury, as assistant to a Friend in his business, and in 1829 was united in marriage with David Fox of that town, who was then left with the care of five motherless children. In contemplating this step she felt that union with one of integrity and uprightness was more to be desired than worldly position; and being often sensible of her need of wisdom, she earnestly craved ability to fulfil the important duties now devolving upon her. Her energy and executiveness found ample scope; and, though surrounded by many cares, both husband and wife strove to be dilligent in their social obligations, and above all things to be faithful to their God. It is instructive to remember their regular attendance of meetings, both on First days and during the week, and how nothing was allowed to hinder this willing service for their Lord; and how binding and full of import to them were the words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Rebecca Fox became an active and valued member of her Monthly Meeting, and filled the offices of Overseer and Elder to the comfort and satisfaction of her friends. Possessed of sound judgment, her counsel was truly helpful, though her natural diffidence led her to entertain a humble opinion of her own ability.

In 1871 D. and R. Fox removed to Ayton, that they might be near some of their married children: but only six weeks after they had made this change David Fox was somewhat suddenly removed by death.

Rebecca Fox bore her last long and suffering illness with cheerful resignation, sometimes remarking that perhaps He who knew her best saw the need for further discipline; and that she desired to be patient till His work was thoroughly accomplished. Ever forgetful of self, her busy fingers were employed, as strength permitted, in little ways of thoughtfulness for those she loved and the remembrance of the quiet cheerfulness of her sick chamber will long be cherished by those who were privileged to attend her.

For several weeks she was unable to lie down on account of the difficulty of breathing, and after a severe attack of faintness it became evident to those around her that her strength was giving way, bringing with it to her a feeling of solemnity? not unmixed with joy. She said one morning that the end was drawing near, and that the little verse kept recurring to her mind, -

"One sweetly solemn thought Comes to me o'er and o*er; I am nearer home to-day, Than I ever have been before."

On one of her children saying that soon the welcome words, "Come, ye blessed," would be heard, she replied, "Oh joyful sound! Oh joyful sound! I wait in deep humiKty." She then mentioned several of her friends by name, also some of her grandchildren, and said, "Oh, if only all would be willing to give their luliole hearts to the Lord, He would pour out such a blessing there would scarcely be room to receive it. One or two days more of patient waiting were permitted her, and a few hours before the close she distinctly whispered, "Kept in the hand of the Lord." Thus relying solely on the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, her purified spirit was released to be for evermore with Him.

Elizabeth Dixon nearly 80 6 5 1914 Great Ayton, Yorks. Wife of Ralph Dixon. A Minister. Elizabeth Dixon, daughter of David and Rebecca Fox, was born at Dewsbury in 1834. She was educated at Ack worth, and for a short time at a private school, and she began her career as a teacher at Ayton when in her eighteenth year, thus commencing her connection of upwards of 60 years' duration with the school in the Cleveland Hills. In 1858 she was married to Ralph Dixon, son of the Superintendent, George Dixon, who succeeded to his father's position shortly after his marriage. Elizabeth Dixon's services as mistress of the household for many years were greatly valued. She always took a loving interest in the children who came to the school, especially the "new-comers" and the "leavers," inviting them to tea, and seeking to get into personal touch with each one. Her Sunday afternoon readings, alternately with boys and girls, were favoured times, never to be forgotten by them in after years. She frequently took part in the vocal service of Meetings for Worship, and her gift in the ministry was early recognised by Friends. She often remarked how great was the sense of responsibility she felt in Meeting, when she looked at the children's faces ranged before her. Her ministry was greatly appreciated, and no one who listened to her simple evangelical addresses could fail to be struck by her exceptional store of memorised Scripture and sacred poetry. Duiring the last two years of her life, when threatened with blindness, and quite unable to read a word, it was a great joy to her to be able to repeat many chapters, and even whole books, of the Bible. Ayton Particular Meeting will greatly miss her faithful ministry and fellowship in worship. One Friend writes: - "I cannot imagine what Ayton Meeting will be like without our dear friend, but her loving messages, calling us all to be faithful, will long be remembered." And another says: - "Her face itself was a benediction; even as a small boy, I was conscious it did me good to look at cheerfulness. She loved to entertain Friends travelling in the ministry and Missionaries on deputation work, and many of these speak warmly of her great kindness and hospitality. The Meetings for Worship held once a month in the old Meeting-house in Bilsdale claimed her loving ministry. Often, in spite of physical weariness, she would take the long drive in order to give help and sympathy to the dalespeople, in whom she took such a kindly interest. She had much joy in life, and was a great lover of Nature, this being especially shown in the keen interest she took in her garden, and her great love of flowers. From the many loving messages of appreciation, sent to her family after her decease, we can only quote the following: - "The remembrance of her cheerful Christ-like spirit will be a cherished possession in the years to come." "Her face itself a benediction." "Surrounded with an atmosphere of love, which made itself felt by all with whom she came in contact." "The memory of such a pure and fragrant life is one of the influences at work in our struggle against the forces of evil ... Oh indeed, we do thank God for such a life." "I shall ever remember with grateful appreciation the kindly interest which she took in me when at Ayton School, and shall always have pleasing recollections of her unfailing sympathy and kindliness. As a true and devoted 'Mother in Israel 'her memory will be blessed." After a long and painful illness, borne, as was characteristic of her, with wonderful resignation, she passed away on the 56th anniversary of her wedding day. It was a matter of great thankfulness to her and to her children that out of nine of them (one son was away in Africa) eight were able to be with her during her last illness. Her two daughters, Katharine Dixon and Gulielma Clark, whom she had "lent to the Lord" for service in the Indian Mission field, were, in His ordering, at home, able to minister to her needs, and to have the never to be forgotten privilege, which was shared by many others, of witnessing the pati

Elizabeth married Ralph Dixon, 1,4,5,15,17,19 son of George Dixon, 3,4,15,17,20,21 and Alice Swinburn, on 6 May 1858 in FMH Dewsbury. Ralph was born on 14 Jan 1836 in Bishop Auckland, County Durham, died on 1 Jul 1916 in Highfield, Great Ayton, Yorkshire at age 80, and was buried in FBG Ayton. They had eight children: Katharine, Arthur Edwin, Alice Elizabeth, Ellen Swinburne, Emily, Edith Mary, Gulielma Maria, and Charles Fox.

General Notes: Ralph Dixon, of Highfield, Great Ayton, died on the first of July, 1916, after only a few days' illness, aged eighty years and a half. He was born 4th January, 1836, at Bishop Auckland, and came with his parents to settle at Great Ayton in 1841, when his father was appointed the first superintendent of the newly-founded North of England Agricultural School there. The mother of Ralph Dixon was Alice Swinburn, who was not originally a Friend; her father was a shipowner of Sunderland, and her great-great-uncle was the Reverend Thomas Stackhouse, M.A., author of the well-known Commentary of the Bible. Ralph Dixon was educated at Ackworth School, and later went to the Flounders Institute. After being for some years the head teacher and virtual superintendent of Ayton Friends' School, he was appointed superintendent in 1865, on his father retiring in order to go to America. He retired from this post in 1896, but carried on as a gentleman farmer at the School Farm until his death, renting it and employing a hand to live in the premises He continued to live at Chestnut House, which had been built for him adjoining the School premises, until 1898, when the house became the School Sanatorium. He then moved to Raby Cottage, a house built by and belonging to his uncle, Robert Dixon of Meynell Hall, Ingleby.

In the year 1907 he built Highfield, his residence at Great Ayton, and the remaining years of his life and that of his wife were very largely spent in planting and tending the beautiful garden surrounding the house. Like his father, who lived to be ninety-two, he was in full possession of his mental and physical powers until the time of his death, with only the loss of activity due to a short illness.

Ralph Dixon was always a very keen naturalist and wrote a book on shells. As a practical farmer all his life and an instructor of agriculture to his pupils at the School, he made a study of agriculture on scientific lines and was well known as a good and up to date farmer in the district. Like his father he was an expert botanist, and from his "seed room" for many years the village people obtained their vegetable and flower seeds. In his phaeton and pony trap he and his family and friends visited the countryside for many miles round Ayton, the dales and villages of this part of Cleveland, and a great number of their inhabitants being well known to him personally. He held by examination a lecturer's diploma, 19th in honours in the United Kingdom in scientific agriculture, and organized classes for the local farmers whom he instructed for a number of years. He was also associated with Lord de Lisle in farmers' classes at Ingleby, three miles away.

In addition to his scientific interests, the study of language and dialect was a great pleasure to Ralph Dixon. Local dialects interested him as being closer to the Anglo-Saxon than the current English of to day. He had a fair knowledge of French, Latin, and Hebrew, and was especially interested in the Hebrew race through his life-long friendship with his cousin Dr. John Dixon, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews in London. Furthermore he learnt the Norwegian language, and made a tour in Norway in the latter part of the 60's, having a very rough and adventurous time there visiting the Norwegian Friends then in Stavanger and elsewhere. During part of the time he spent in Norway he was the guest of Asbjorn Kloster, of Stavanger, the founder of the total abstinence movement in Norway who had visited Ayton School for several months in 1850 in order to study English teaching methods and the English language, and had there first heard of total abstinence.

Asbjorn Kloster's sons were later educated at Ayton School, and his public statue is to be seen in Stavanger. One of his sons called on Ralph Dixon at Great Ayton a few years before his death.

In 1885 Ralph Dixon visited Hamburg, Hanover and the Rhine, and the Friends in Minden and Piermont; and in the spring of 1901 he made a second visit to Norway with his eldest daughter and was much interested in remarking the changes which had taken place in more than thirty years.

He was appointed a Minister of the Society of Friends in early life, this being an honorary recognition accorded to those members of the Society who speak frequently and acceptably in their meetings. He frequently exercised his gift in this respect within the boundaries of Guisborough Monthly Meeting, but he was of a retiring disposition, and never felt called upon to seek a wider field, except at Hawes and in Wensleydale. Ralph Dixon's faith was simple and evangelical, but of the quiet old-fashioned type. His natural trend was more practical and scientific than literary or critical, and while he was among the first in the district to take up and practise successfully photography, the magic-lantern, acetylene gas, and new farm instruments and methods, the application of scientific theories to religious questions did not trouble him as it has troubled so many Friends during the last generation. To him an intelligent acceptance of the Bible, read in accordance with the quiet doctrines of evangelical Quakerism, sufficed; but he was very liberal minded with regard to others and laid most stress on the virtue of their lives and the genuineness of. their convictions. He abhorred hypocrisy and sanctimoniousness and pride, but freely recognised opinions different from, his own.

His sermons were usually expositions of biblical passages with the object of showing the infinity of God's love for us, of pointing out the simplicity of the way of salvation, and of exhorting us all to live honourably before men and God. They were not so personally Striking or dramatic, nor were they so embellished with literary references or historical examples as are the addresses of some Quaker ministers, nor did they enter the realms of Mysticism or Higher Criticism; but they were simple, straightforward and humble, and revealed an extremely intimate acquaintance with the Bible, a broad appreciation of Nature and of Humanity, familiarity with the experiences of the early Quakers and of missionaries and philanthropists, and the general information at the disposal of a well-informed mind.

Although possessing much of the vigour and enthusiasm and progressiveness of his father, he had not his self-assertion. He was reserved, reticent, and shy, and did not seek new friends, or accept public positions. He was not a ready conversationalist, but had the courage to speak where he felt it necessary. He was nevertheless always very ready to organise meetings or entertainments for those whom he felt he could help in Ayton and the neighbouring villages, and many much appreciated magic lantern shows, temperance meetings, bible-meetings, pleasant Sunday afternoon meetings, social teas, excursions, farmers' classes, mothers' meetings, &c., owed their conception and management to him and his wife. At these times he could be thoroughly comfortable, and enjoyed himself as much as anyone. He was so essentially humble that no one could ever feel "patronised," and this was no doubt the reason why he was so much respected by the country people although he was not rich and gave away little of a material nature.

The heavy responsibilities which he took on becoming superintendent of a large boarding-school when only twenty-nine years of age no doubt produced a certain sternness in the interest of discipline, but those who knew him at all well in later life knew how extraordinarily warm-hearted, generous, affectionate and forgiving he really was, although always in the most secret and quiet way possible. He valued his honour and good name very considerably, but he seemed to have no worldly pride whatever and would show no increased respect or deference to people of wealth or social position, in fact, his manner was probably less gracious to peer, baronet, or wealthy Quaker than to a farmer or tradesman. He enjoyed telling stories and anecdotes of his earlier days and experiences to his children and grandchildren and was often humorous and always most matter of fact in his conversation.

In politics he was a Liberal of the old school and not at all in agreement with socialistic tendencies, but he was never a keen politician. He hated all war and preparations for war and did all he could for the cause of peace. While deeply lamenting the present war he took no extreme pacifist view and thought that young men ought to help their country in non-combatant ways. It is interesting; to remember that his grandfather and namesake was fighting. a hundred years ago in Spain against the French, and that now one of his grandsons is fighting in this war on the same side as our former hereditary enemy.

When it is recollected that Ralph Dixon was superintendent of Ayton School for over thirty years, and that his father and he together were consecutively in charge for considerably over half-a-century, it is more easy to realise how his name and memory are inseparably connected with it in the minds of hundreds of his old scholars. His father presumably sat in the ministers' gallery of Ayton Meeting on becoming superintendent in 1841, and either father or son sat there without any break for exactly seventy-five years.

The life of a head master of a Quaker boarding school is not usually filled with incident sufficiently important to warrant narration in a biographical sketch. The careful guardianship of the youth of both sexes and the judicious supervision of their education require a man of honour and wisdom, of discretion and energy, and of intelligence and adapt ability. These qualities were displayed in no small degree by Ralph Dixon during the thirty years of his Superintendence. The work which he thus accomplished is of great importance to the nation, and the recognition accorded to men who hold such positions seems hardly proportionate. But Ralph Dixon certainly did not seek public recognition; he merely sought to do his duty.

One or two incidents with regard to his school life may be mentioned. The school swimming bath was originally a linseed vat in what is now the Station Road; when this had to be given up the scholars bathed in the open river for a time, but Ralph Dixon was anxious to convert some old tan pits in the School garden into a proper bath. Some difficulty was experienced, so he and the older boys made the present swimming bath and laid the cement with their own hands. Contrary to the expectation of the School Committee he was able to collect sufficient money to erect the gymnasium and lecture hall to commemorate the school jubilee. His father, George Dixon, had started the school museum with curios obtained by his friend Isaac Sharp in Greenland, Labrador, and other parts of the world, and Ralph Dixon was much interested in adding to it. Besides his keen interest in botany, he interested the schoolars in astronomy, and persuaded Joseph Pease, M.P. for Darlington, to present the School with a valuable telescope.

The principal patrons of the School with whom he came into contact were Thomas Richardson of Cleveland Lodge, Great Ayton, and of Richardson, Overend and Gurney, bankers of London, the founder of the School; John and Henry Richardson of Langbaurgh Hall, Great Ayton; Edward Pease of Darlington, founder of the first railway, John Pease of Cleveland Lodge and of Darlington; his son Joseph Pease, his grandson Sir Joseph Whitwell Pease, Bart, of Hutton Hall, and his great-grandson Sir Alfred E. Pease, Bart., of Pinchinthorpe House; and Jonathan Backhouse Hodgkin of Cleveland Lodge and of Darlington. The scholars have filled many useful positions in all parts of the world and space does not permit of naming any here. Further information may be obtained from the History of Ayton School published in the year 1891 and written by Ralph Dixon and his father.

Ex-JP and Rotary stalwart dies at 93

May 13 2005 By Evening Gazette

Bevan Pumphrey, former Teesside businessman, Rotarian, magistrate and traveller, has died aged 93.

A Quaker, Mr Pumphrey was brought up in Great Ayton and attended the Friends School there. His family had a long connection with the village and three years ago he presented a seat to the parish council to be sited on High Green, looking towards the cottage in which his mother was born.

He was formerly chairman and managing director of W&M Pumphrey Ltd, the Thornaby sugar millers.

In 1957 he was presented to the Queen and Prince Philip when they visited Teesside.

He joined Middlesbrough Rotary Club in 1939, was president in 1952 and was made an honorary member when he moved to Sussex in the 1980s. He became a Paul Harris Fellow - the highest Rotary honour - in 1989 and later moved to Kent.

Mr Pumphrey was appointed a magistrate in Middlesbrough in 1952 and served for 30 years.

In 1931, when he was 19, he worked as a volunteer in digging a pipeline and building a dam in Labrador.

Mr Pumphrey's firm had business connections with Czechoslovakia. One of his most bizarre experiences was when, on a visit to Prague in 1948, he was asked by the intelligence service to pass a message on microfilm to the Czech underground, which he did.

He leaves a widow, Jacqueline, in Tenterden, Kent.
