Marriage Notes: A delightful story concerning Henry Dymond's involvement with Sidcot school where he 'nearly completed' his 7 year indenture and where he met Edith Frank is titled "A History of Sidcot School : a hundred years of West country Quaker education : 1808-1908" is available online.

A few extracts concerning Henry and Edith is as below:

Henry Dymond, then aged about fourteen, should be indentured for seven years, being provided with board, lodging and clothes, and receiving 7s. a quarter for three years, 10s. 6d. a quarter for two years, and 14s. a quarter for the remainder of his time.

His duties were thus defined by the Committee : -

" During Cyphering, that he attend to some of the minor boys, and to those who do no Cyphering.

" In Reading, that he attend to the first class as Monitor.

" In Spelling, that he hear one or two of the lower classes if Thomas Whalley has not time to attend to them all.

" In Writing, that he attend to some of the worst Writers, and that he rule and prepare the copy-books.

" In Grammar, that he Parse with the first class, and assist T. W. in hearing the boys their lessons in case any Monitor should be absent.

"In Geography, that he attend to those boys' lessons who are not in the class, or engaged by T. W. at the Maps, also to those boys who learn no Geography.

" That he take the books out of the drawers for Reading, Cyphering, &c., and give out Copies, Books, &c., in any Monitor's absence.

" And also attend to any other general matters as occasion may require."

Henry Dymond served nearly, but not quite, the full term of his apprenticeship. His time would have expired in July 1822. He left in December 1821, and in the reason for his going there is a touch of romance such as one would hardly look for in the sober pages of a Committee Minute- book. The young dominie was indentured on the 22nd of July 1815, and his name appears again in connection with the foregoing list of his duties. After that the Records are silent about him until September 1821, when it was reported to the Committee that "Henry Dymond, an apprentice to the School, was in the habit of paying frequent visits to the Governess of the Girls' School ; on which the Committee called him before them and pointed out to him the impropriety of a young man of the Boys' School visiting the Girls' School, and requested him to discontinue his visits, they being contrary to good order."

The young delinquent, then aged about twenty, and receiving the not very dazzling salary of three pounds per annum, quietly disregarded the injunction, and "continued his visits there as frequently as before." The Committee which met on 15th October, informed their recalcitrant apprentice that " he could not be allowed to go to the Girls' School at all." His reply was that "he could give the Committee no reason to expect an alteration in his conduct." Who the

The Descendants of William Frye

Governess was who thus attracted him is not specified in the indictment, but we are introduced to her in other Minutes of the Committee.

The year 1820 was an unsettled one in the management of the School. Joseph Naish and Lydia Gregory resigned their posts at the summer. Out of four candidates for the vacant Head-mastership, John Dafforn Ellis was selected, at a salary of £130 per annum; and at the same time Edith Frank was engaged as Governess, at £2 a year. But neither she nor the new Heads of the Institution could be at their posts on the opening day. And when school began, after the summer vacation of 1820, not only were there no Superintendents, but there was no schoolmaster for the boys, and neither schoolmistress nor assistant for the girls. The want of these officials was temporarily supplied, as had so often happened before, by volunteers from the Committee. The only salaried officer in the place was the young apprentice Henry Dymond.

It was in the autumn of that year that Henry Dymond's visits to the Girls' House attracted the attention of the Committee. The remonstrances of that Body proving of no avail, the undaunted young lover was called before a special sitting, held in Bristol. He then declared that he would "submit to their directions," but he requested to be allowed "occasionally to visit the young woman." To this the Committee refused their sanction, until Henry Dymond should have produced the written consent "of his mother and the young woman's father."

The visits, however, continued, sanction or no sanction; and the culprit, arraigned for the third time, gave the Committee "no reason to expect that he would conform to their directions." At a later sitting he declared his wish that "the intimacy with the Governess" - whose name is not once mentioned in the whole affair - might "be considered with a view to a matrimonial alliance," adding that both parents had given their consent.

Henry Dymond was called before the Committee for the last time, in November 1821, and informed that, as it would be "very improper and injurious to the interests of the Institution" for him to stay in it, he must leave, "in one month." He left accordingly, as the records show. But the Governess, Edith Frank, the young lady whose attractions had raised all this storm, promptly gave notice that she was going, too; and the lovers left Sidcot within a few weeks of each other. When, a little later, Henry Dymond's sister Miriam applied for the post of Governess, the authorities, smarting perhaps under a sense of what had recently happened, told her that they were "not prepared to make any alteration in the officers of the Girls' House at present." Clearly, "No Dymond need apply!" Edith Frank, being a salaried teacher, received no official gift on leaving. But it is interesting to know that, in spite of the trouble he had given them, Henry Dymond was presented by the authorities with thirty shillings, two suits of clothes, two hats, six shirts, six pair of stockings, six neck-handkerchiefs, two pocket-handkerchiefs, and two pair of shoes, "all of good and sufficient quality." This was a usual practice, in the case of apprentices who had completed their full term, and had given satisfaction. That the presentation was made in this particular instance, may be regarded as proof that, in all respects save one, the young teacher was considered to have done his duty by the Institution.

So passed from Sidcot the high-spirited Governess and her bold young lover. Long afterwards, - a whole generation afterwards, - the pair, as Henry and Edith Dymond, came back, the Master and Mistress of the School. Every vestige of the Girls' House had by that time disappeared. No stone was left standing on another that could have been associated with that far away romance. The avenue of limes had gone. The apple-trees that once had filled the centre of the precincts had all been cleared away. But it needs no very wild flight of the imagination to picture the two grave and reverend seigniors, pacing slowly up and down the altered Long Garden, pausing in the shadow of the familiar elms, or of the old oak that, to the schoolboys of fifty years since, still bore Henry Dymond's name; recalling now the perfume of the long-vanished limes, and now reminding each other, with delight, of every detail of the episode that, so many years before, had called down upon his head the wrath of the Committee.
