It was supposed that Frederic had rheumatic fever. At the same time, the Superintendents of the school, Edward Foster Brady and his wife Elizabeth were ill.

"I was called up at about five this morning to see F. Greenwood. On entering the room, he immediately asked me to read to him, which I was about to do; but he became to restless to render the attempt desirable, and in a few minutes, after having become perfectly quiet, it was evident that his end was very near. He made signs for something to be applied to his lips and a little wine was given him; very soon, after which, his respiration having become gradually weaker, he ceased to breathe. The dear boy departed very quietly and there is, we trust, reason to believe that with him all is well."
